Airing Sounds – Wasting Rhythm is a unique production of the Drumschool Basel, composed for “Environment & Health - Bridging South, North, East and West”.

Drumschool Basel, funded in 1985 by the Swiss drummer and musician Cyrill Lützelschwab, empowered a generation of children, adolescence and adults in learning and sharing the language of rhythm and music. Its famous percussion ensemble „Groove26“ regularly captures the public with compositions and events, often featured at unusual places. For Airing Sounds – Wasting Rhythm, Cyril got inspired by the research themes and visions pursued by the conference participants to improve public health through research in environment and health sciences.
